

It's now law: Seniors get 20% discount

SENIOR CITIZENS CAN NOW STRETCH their cash a little further. A PDS law now, for example, at an international but local choice would cost them only P120.

This after President Manzanillo-Arroyo signed his signature yesterday to the Expanded Senior Citizens Act of 2010 (RCSA), or Republic Act No. 994, a law that will benefit some five million elderly Filipinos in the form of discounts on certain goods and services.

PCCI FORUM: Presidential candidates Manny Villar, Eddie Villanueva, Gilbert Teodoro, Richard Gordon, Joseph Estrada and Noyoy Aquino face another round of grilling in a forum sponsored by the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry at the Marriott Hotel in Pasay City on Tuesday. Again expressing his view that the forum-moderator is biased for Manny Villar makes for an engaging discussion.

Noyonoy annoyed by moderator's bias for Villar

By Gil C. Calasiao Jr.

THE SNEERING FROM SEN. NOYNOY Aquino III and the moderator of a presidential forum was one of the highlights in a stall debate sponsored by the Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry (PCCI).

Aquino, Liberal Party standard-bearer, could not hide his irritation at the remarks made by journalist Antonio Lopez that he wished the forum had a "more unbiased moderator."

Lopez's bias appeared to be for Aquino's main rival, Sen. Manuel Villar.

The forum was sponsored by the PCCI at the Marriott Hotel, across from Terminal 3 of the Ninoy Aquino International Airport in Pasay City.

In his introduction, Lopez described Villar, Nacionalista Party standard-bearer, as a "well-made cynic, former

Want to back out as election data centers

By Christine O. Arellano

YET ANOTHER HITCH IN THE MAY 10 AUTOMATED elections?

Fearing physical or technical attacks, Globe Telecom yesterday proposed to withdraw its offer to host the main data center that would transmit the election results of the May 10 polls on its premises in Makati City.

Expressing similar apprehension, Philippine Long Distance Company (PLDT) also attempted to get out of its previous offer to set up a "backup" data center in its Makati offices.

Instead, both Globe and PLDT proposed alternative sites to host the servers of the Commission on Elections (Comelec). The new sites would be inspected today and it would be announced later if the locations would meet standards for the secure transmission of poll results.

Comelec Chair Jose Manuel would the new sites offered by the two firms in Clark, Pampanga, "did not measure up to the standards."

Smartmatic-TIM later found that PLDT Clark and Globe Clark "did not comply with the technical and security specifications."

PLDT was offering just "a small office" while Globe Clark lacked "the required re-

RP-MILF peace talks put off over drafts' differences

PEACE TALKS BETWEEN THE government and the separatist Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) have been put off on the latest's request for a draft of the wide disparity between the two camps' draft agreements.

The MILF sought the postponement of the talks that were to have resumed tomorrow "to give us time to review the [government's] draft," MILF peace chair Mahaghar Iqbal yesterday told the Inquirer in Manila by phone. "The difference between our draft and the government's is too big."

Divers find whale shark with fins, tail sliced off

PAANGASINAN CITY—A DEAD WHALE shark without fins and a tail was pulled on the shores of Tiniglay Island on Tuesday morning, leaving a sad epitaph to a Manila conference of 30 nations for the protection of the endangered fish species.

Locally known as "bandung," the juvenile whale shark (Baleorhynchus typus) was found at 9:30 a.m. on Monday by a group of foreign and local divers in Tiniglay Island on the island, 44 kilometers from this city.

It was still alive but "very weak" when the group left it at 5 a.m., said Rey Manalo, head of the Tiniglay Diver (see photo) in Tiniglay.

Manalo said the whale shark, measuring 10 feet, could have gotten accidentally entangled in a net laid out by a group of island fishermen who were catching fish nearby.

They must have tried to rescue the creature with their bare hands but could not do so without cutting its fins and tail, he said.

Since it could no longer swim, the hapless giant fish was placed in cool waters with Nancy-Dagor personal waiting over it, Manila said. Unfortunately, it died on Monday night and

Ali Baba is gone, but thieves still around, thriving

By Fernando del Mundo

(Third of a series)

THE LATE ANIME CANDIDATE SEN FLORENCE said, after the ouster of the dictator Ferdinand Marcos in the 1986 People Power revolution that while FIlippines had driven out Ali Baba, the 40 thieves remained.

The crooks not only stayed, they multiplied. It is a problem the new president certainly will have to address.

Today, the perception is widespread that corruption pervades every level of Philippine society.

This is evident from the anarchy in the streets, abetted by politicians who turn a blind eye to traffic infractions for a fee, to swindling and dealing in the markets of power.

The cost begins to mount.

The World Bank, in a study in 2004, stood estimates from the Philippine Commission on Audit (COA) in 2001 that a whopping $4 billion—roughly P200 billion—had been lost annually to corruption.

UWUA ACCOMPLISHMENT REPORT CY 2009

PURSuing PGMA'S VISION OF WATER FOR ALL (ESPECIALLY THE WATERLESS)

The nine years of the PGMA administration have seen dramatic, profound and steady gains in the government's provincial water supply development programs. These gains have become even more intensified and pronounced following the inclusion of possible water supply among the PGMA administration's priority legacy development programs with the vision of providing water to all, especially the waterless in the local national government agency for provincial water supply development, the Local Water Utilities Administration (LWUA) has been in the forefront of helping realize the President's vision and legacy program on water. Significantly, much of LWUA's accomplishment have been attained and the reforms and innovations introduced with the appointment as Chairman of the LWUA Board of Trustees of former Congressman Prospero A. Pichay, Jr. in September 2006. In CY 2009, under the dynamic and inspiring leadership of Chairman Prospero A. Pichay, Jr., LWUA registered its highest single year accomplishment in terms of its key results targets as follows:

ESTABLISHMENT OF MORE WATER DISTRICTS FOR EXPANDED WATER SUPPLY

GOVERNMENTAL innovation being the key to the national development, proper management as well as sustained operation and maintenance of possible water supply systems in the provincial areas, LWUA in CY 2009 was able to establish an additional 179 new water districts covering 45,000 cities and municipalities in the

PHILIPPINE LAMP FORMER WATER PROJECT IN PANGLOSS
President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo selected by Chairman Prospero A. Pichay Jr. (2nd from right) to turn the dam cascade during the grand opening of P20-million possible water supply project to benefit some 20,000 residents of the depressed townships in Pangloss, Pangasinan funded by a grant from the Global Water Foundation. The project is part of LWUA's "Rising Waters" program in support of PGMA administration's vision of providing water for all, especially with particular emphasis on the so-called waterless communities.

PGMA, US SENATOR KENNETH TUMAI DOWS, PTM HIGHER NATIONAL OFFICIALS, LWUA President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo and US Ambassador Kristie Ramsey recently led the inauguration and turnover of a newly-completed P73.1 million water supply system in the Jolo Marikina Water District (JMWD) in private safe and clean drinking water to thousands of communities in the capital of Jolo and the adjacent towns of Jolo and Jolo. The water system was rehabilitated, expanded and improved further with the financial assistance of the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) through the USAID Growth and Equity in Mindanao (GEM) and the Local Water Utilities Administration (LWUA). Photo down: Yes, Arroyo, Ambassador Ramsey and Jolo Governor Abdurrahman Tawil watching in approval as LWUA acting Administrator General L. Landigang, vice-mayor of Jolo, Chairman Prospero Pichay and the JWD, present the certificate of project completion and turnover to the residents of the beneficiary areas. countrywide. On top of this, LWUA last year also managed to restructure or fully pay in its operations a total of 289 formerly non-operational water districts bringing the total number of operational water districts in the country to 1000 covering 921 cities and municipalities.

MADE AVAILABLE P19 BILLION FUND FOR IMPROVED SERVICE, EXPANDED ACCESS TO SAFE DRINKING WATER

Increased public investment is crucial in the development of provincial water supply systems for improved and expanded water service for the already established water districts and providing access to safe drinking water for the still waterless communities currently waterless. Towards this end in CY 2009, through the active involvement of Chairman Prospero A. Pichay Jr. in securing and awarding bonds, LWUA was able to make available a total of P19 billion including P7.348 billion in soft loans and grants coming from the national government to fund water supply programs especially targeting the small water districts and the poor, waterless communities.

INTRODUCED NOVEL FUNDING SCHEME FOR POOR COMMUNITIES

To make the water supply program sustainable, a viable proposition and at the same time, the corresponding water service and water fees affordable to the poor communities, LWUA in CY 2009, through the initiative of Chairman Pichay has introduced financing schemes that offer reduced interest rates and longer repayment periods for project loans and the proper mix of financial assistance to the beneficiary water districts consisting of loans and grants.

ATTENDED TO THE NEEDS OF THE WATERLESS COMMUNITIES

In CY 2009, LWUA intensified its commitment, financial and technical development initiatives to finally provide greater access to safe potable water supply to the residents of the so-called still waterless communities under its area of responsibility. LWUA has completed the construction of water supply systems in 51 waterless communities while projects for 64 others are still ongoing and the next last year.

PROVIDED ACCESS TO SAFE WATER TO AN ADDITIONAL FIVE MILLION PEOPLE IN THE COUNTRYSIDE

With adequate funding secured through the collection and efforts of Chairman Pichay which results led to the completion by LWUA of 128 water supply infrastructure improvement and expansion projects in 2009, an additional five (5) million people living in the countryside were given access to safe potable water supply. As of year-end CY 2009, the number of Filipinos in the provinces who are directly served with piped potable water totaled more than twenty (20) million.

AND COUNTING...

With 512 more water supply projects on the completion as of the end of 2009 and still more in the pipeline, the number of people benefiting from safe, potable and affordable water will definitely continue to rise in the coming years.

P20-M FOR CAGUEN WATER SUPPLY IMPROVEMENT President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo awarded LWUA Chairman Prospero A. Pichay Jr. (2nd from right) for securing some P20 million for the improvement and expansion of water supply systems in Tuguegarao City and various towns of Cagayan province in support of her priority program of providing adequate and affordable drinking water to every Filipino home.

Toyota lures back spooked US buyers

Hit hard by recall crisis, Japanese firm outlines major incentive campaign

Asian shares gain

TOYOTA—ASIAN—SHARE
Markets posted solid gains on Tuesday with Australian stocks boosted by upbeat earnings from banks. Meanwhile, while the euro held its ground as Greece saw deflation for the first time in three years, shares were on a roller coaster.

Gains such as Hong Kong and Shanghai advanced ahead of the Asian New Year and with US markets also rose on Monday. Japan's Nikkei 225 index of Asian shares excluding Japan rose 0.4 percent, reflecting its highest level in nearly two weeks, with bank shares and metals stocks leading the gains.

In Japan, the benchmark Nikkei edged up 4.2 percent but lost just above the 16,000 mark for the third session in a row, although the mood was fragile due to China and Greece.

"Looking at the type of shares people are buying, it seems like the risks are tilted toward the domestic rather than the upside," said Kiyoshi Noda, chief fund manager at M&F Investments.

He said there were signs investors may be shifting funds into high-dividend shares in defensive sectors such as pharmaceuticals and telecommunications, and away from more China-linked shares.

ORLANDO, FLA.—TOYOTA MOTOR CORP. is planning an aggressive incentive program for March to lure US customers away from a damaging product safety crisis, executives said on Monday.

The world's largest automaker, reeling from the largest recall in its history and most of the vehicles in its US showroom have been repaired and are back for sale, adding it to evaluating a range of options to support next month's sales.

"We are studying everything," US auto chief Bob Carter told reporters after a meeting with nearly 300 Toyota dealers at the National Automobile Dealers Association convention, "90 percent confidence."

Don Bonanni, senior vice president of Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., said Toyota will be as aggressive as needed to help dealers keep reeling customers and attract new ones.

But the executives said the company had yet to make decisions on the terms of a marketing push and declined to elaborate on the options being considered.

A source familiar with the company's will developing plans that Toyota is considering offering a $1,000 rebate in addition to the current $1,000 in cash incentives for its remaining February customers.

Toyota's current $1,000 in "loyalty" bonus matches incentives offered by General Motors Co., Ford Motor Co., Chrysler and Hyundai Motor Co. in late Toyota sales.

Other options Toyota is considering include a free maintenance program—such as oil changes and regular repairs—and a new warranty program that at least matches Hyundai's market-leading 10-year, 100,000-mile powertrain warranty, a source said.

The executives said most of Toyota's inventory of 131,600 vehicles imported in the recall have had their production stopped and the end of February, almost all of them will be sold.

Toyota's US sales dropped 16 percent in January to its lowest level in more than a decade after it suspended sales of about half of its inventory of vehicles including the popular Camry and Corolla sedans, due to safety recalls over potentially faulty air-conditioning parts.

Overall US industry sales were up 6 percent last month.

US auto sales are trending at about 1.8 million to 1.9 million units a month, according to the industry's January survey.

Toyota's sales will be down in February based on last month's of the US market was "holding up" and "stable" despite the recall crisis.

Toyota, No. 2 in US sales behind GM, saw its US market share fall to 14 percent in January—its lowest level since January 2006—down 1.7 percent for the year 2010.

Toyota has recalled more than 5.5 million vehicles globally due to the risk that faulty air-conditioning parts in some cars may result in uncontrolled acceleration.

Microsoft unveils new version of mobile platform

REDMOND, MICROSOFT UNVEILED on Monday a new version of its mobile operating system as the US software giant seeks to regain lost ground in the highly competitive smartphone market.

Chief executive Steve Ballmer presented the Windows Phone 7 series at the Mobile World Congress in Barcelona, Spain, and his remarks of appreciation about what Microsoft had in store for the industry's biggest trade show.

"We're taking a step, I think a big step," Ballmer said, adding that devices fitted with the new software would be available to use for the winter holiday shopping season. "The excitement about the direction that we're heading," he said.

Microsoft has been up against strong competition from Internet giant Google's Android, as both companies fight for a share of a market dominated by the Blackberry and Apple's iPhone.

"The primary goal of Windows Mobile 7 is clearly to address Microsoft's shortcomings in the consumer mobile market," said Charles Golvin, analyst at research firm Forrester.

Google has made a splash in the mobile phone industry with its Android operating system, launched in 2007, and phone makers have announced that they would release several more smartphones with the platformable price.

Smartphones fitted with Microsoft's operating system had 7.9 percent market share in the third quarter of last year, a decline from 13.1 percent in the same period in 2010, according to research firm Gartner. In the meantime, Golvin gave Blackberry market research in March saw its market share increase to 20.6 percent and Apple's iPhone rose to 17.1 percent, according to Gartner.

In his speech, Microsoft completely changed the platform's look and in the initial capabilities of its June 15th phone, which has only been available in the United States.

The system includes an "index" app group similar to desktop, such as a "People" index that includes e-mail, text messages and updates from social network activities, as well as Live.com for online games.

Microsoft powered touch screen phones will be rolled out later this year in partnership with several device makers including Qualcomm, Samsung and LG, as well as operators from AT&T to T-Mobile and Vodafone, the company said.

BMW's entry-luxury baby SAV

FROM THERE WAS THE X3. Then came the X5, followed by the baby's in 2006, but when rumors thought that BMW would come up with an even bigger X7 as their new Super Activity Vehicle (SAV), the press assumed that of 2016 for the world and gave the "small it beautiful" status of division parent-new.

Against this backdrop, came the BMW X1. X1 Series 2.0 is the smallest SAV. Sold as the first premium compact crossover in the world, the latest kid in the block was launched by Mahindra, which with BMW support from Canadian Corp. possibly announcing that the Philippines is the first Southeast Asian market to offer it. This shows the importance of the Philippine market, AGC president today besides said at the launch.

Primarily designed

That wasn't too, but the Munich-based automaker's decision to manufacture the X1 in North America until 2011 may say, got another conclusion: the X1 was primarily designed for the European and Asian markets, where small vehicles sell well, and is being positioned as the entry-luxury SUV that it was of hard-earned on these two continents. With a price tag of P1,099,000, entry-luxury level the X1 certainly is, if not lower than other rivals. In fact, the X1 is just as pricey as the BMW X3 and X5.

That said, BMW can rightfully position the X1 as the world's first premium compact crossover SAV because it is smaller, shorter in overall height (only 60.8 inches) and also lower (7.6 inches ground clearance) than the Mercedes-Benz GLE 250, Lexus RX 350, Audi Q5, Land Rover Freelander 2 and Volvo XC60. What's more, the X1 looks more confident than its competitors and in some cases provides a more com-

Another advantage that the X1 boasts over the pack is fuel consumption, as its common rail direct injection diesel powerplant. Also, the Land Rover Freelander 2 and Volvo XC60 achieve common fuel economy rates, but their engines have bigger displacements—2.2 liter in the Freelander 2 and 2.4 liter in the Volvo XC60—and they are bigger and heavier, meaning they probably consume more fuel than the smaller, lighter X1. The X1 gets 30.5 kilometers per liter, sports from zero to 100 km/h in 8.4 seconds and has a top speed of 200 km/h.

If you're a premium car buyer vacationing abroad, the X1 2.0 is much more expensive than the Volvo XC60 ES, but keep that the price you pay for benefiting the BMW badge with its long history of performance and luxury. The X1 is powered by a rather tiny 2.0 liter common rail diesel engine with direct injection and turbocharger with variable intake geometry, producing 177 hp/4,000 rpm and 350 Nm/1,750 rpm max torque.

Grip

The 8-speed automatic transmission with Steptronic, hydraulic steering and active, BMW's standard xDrive system, plus a finely tuned suspension provide grip wherever the road surface and weather conditions. The X1 is not built or packaged to hold over off-road driving, as it is not equipped with low-range gear and the hydraulic approach and departure angles and all that stuff. The fact one look at this beautiful baby and you'll never want to take it off-road when it can get scratched, dented and so dirty.

Which brings us to the question: In the world of BMW, how does the X1 push market share from the X3, which is also a compact premium SUV and with a direct version as the X160i, you see, the X1 and X3 are entry-level priced but have different market status. The X1 looks more like an elegant urban suv or what they call an urban car in the UK, using more direct from the X Series while the X3 appears more utilitarian, more SUV. And while the X1's exterior looks bigger, the X1's interior has more headroom and more shoulder room than even the current X3 plus more storage space and upholstery. BMW's maintenance-free, homogeneity is an approach to the X1.

Safety

The X1's safety features include airbags, ABS with Cornering Brake Control, Dynamic Stability Control, Dynamic Traction Control, indirect brake lock-up on all 17-inch wheels, active steering, active steering control front and rear, electronic stability control, lane-keeping system, BMW's Professional, CD changer, USB interface, Bluetooth phone preparation and AUX in connection to the radio system.

Summing up, the X1 is undoubtedly packed, quite possibly the baby SAV it is a joy to be held and a pleasure to drive. It is an interesting machine.

The milk maid

By Joyce Mambuan Yapagun
 Contributor

DURING MY PREGNANCY, I was bombarded with books and information about breastfeeding. Even my husband, who has no mammary glands, would tell me that I would have to give our baby breast milk for at least a year.

Although it never felt, it seems that breast-feeding is back-without a question. Once on the days when hospitals did up with manufacturers of formula milk, and given every new mother with a welcome basket full of milk in cans, breastfeeding advocates are out in the open, louder and prouder.

Breastfeeding is not an ordeal or as stressful as I thought it would be. There was the baby too for whom it is easy for the rest of us to do overnight breastfeeding and difficult night nursing. I knew that I would give up easily especially after the onset of childbirth, so I consulted with a lactation consultant my grandmother (Dr. Tangkoko-Joyce recommended to me).

From all the reading I did, I discovered that breastfeeding was a mother-baby team effort. Every team needs a coach, so I called up Joyce Mambuan when I was seven months pregnant and scheduled a pre-natal massage with her so I could meet her.

Breastfeeding coach

Only is a breastfeeding coach not lactation consultant. The word "coach" means merely that—the team both coach and baby have to learn, learn, learn the different positions to feed your baby in, and most importantly, stress you on and give moral support.

Joyce's friendly and open demeanor made me comfortable that I could rely on her for support in breastfeeding. I asked her to come to the hospital just before after my baby was born to help me get the right start in breastfeeding. She is wonderful in providing lactation, which she made regularly through e-mail. Although she is very busy, she makes the time to see you.

Joyce started her career as a coordinator and had been practicing for three years in the field before she was hired to set up the first Prenatal Lactation Clinic here in the Philippines at Ateneo Hospital called Birth's Tip. She went for further training in Prenatal and Lactation Manager, as both are specialty managers.

Prenatal massages are designed to relax the mother when the big baby is coming, a relief on her body. It would certainly promote pain that can trigger contractions. The lactation manager is there to stimulate the breasts to produce milk. Most importantly, the lactation manager helps teach milk down, a common occurrence in breastfeeding, where it is often said that milk can lead to slow release of milk, painful lumps, engorgement in the breasts, and sometimes even a fever. Moreover, it gives mothers an hour and a half of time to breastfeed or even an entire milk down a first, shoulder and head massage, perfect for a tired mom.

Clinic

For those who can't get Joyce for a prenatal massage, she now has breastfeeding classes with the group MilkMama (Mama, Milk, and Me).

How to encourage picky kids to eat healthy

SOME MOMS ARE HAVING A hard time balancing daily meals for their kids because some are really hard to feed while others are picky eaters.

A new research study sponsored by Nestlé that is run in the US shows more than half of children ages nine to six are considered "hard to feed" by their mothers. An analysis of 175 children, ages seven to nine, revealed that an age seven, nearly half (49 percent) were classified as "hard to feed."

A study on child nutritional status by WHO Philippines in June 2009 revealed 67 percent of Filipino kids are picky eaters.

Here are some healthy tips on how to encourage picky eaters to eat in a healthy way, recommended by Catherine Goergens, medical nutritionist, who held a lecture on proper nutrition in Manila recently.

- Introduce new food one at a time as kids won't get confused on the taste of a new food.
- Have small portions. Don't force your child to eat more if he's already full.
- Introduce unfamiliar food with food he liked for greater success.
- Good food is a different way. According to Goergens, childhood is the time to build good eating and exercise habits. It becomes much harder to make lifestyle changes as adulthood.

She said parents play a critical role in promoting a healthy lifestyle among kids by setting positive models.

Teaching your kids to eat the right food, it is best to introduce to them the basic food groups: grains, vegetables, milk, fruits, and protein and calcium group," said Goergens. By teaching them the benefits of these food groups and the vitamins and minerals they provide, kids can become familiar with them.

The makers of Pedialyte, a nutritional milk supplement for children one to 10 years old, understand kids' daily meals are important, and their purpose was to ensure their kids get all the nutrients and vitamins that can help them grow taller and stronger.

Pedialyte has the highest calcium density that provides more energy to sustain play, learning and growth. Higher Metabolic Chain Inguinolite (MCHC) — a quick source of energy to help children maintain healthy body activity better height and have appropriate weight. Plus, it has the vitamins and minerals that meet the 100 percent Recommended Energy and Nutrition levels of Filipino children.
